Re: Product Designer at Complion

Thank you for taking me into consideration for your open Product Designer role.

One of the first things that drew me to this position was the industry that Complion supports. As a user experience designer, my primary motivation has always been to improve the lives of others, no matter how modest those improvements might be. Though I've valued my previous experiences working in the paint, banking and insurance industries, I have often dreamed of designing products with greater real world impact and meaning. The opportunity to positively impact the lives of healthcare professionals with Complion would simply be a dream for me, as such opportunities are why I chose a career in UX to begin with.

Another thing that drew me to this position is your company's values. One of my favorite things about being a designer is working directly with the real users and getting their unfiltered feedback. I've worked on teams that have viewed user research and testing as non-vital UX activities, and I quickly learned that those are not the kind of teams I wish to work for. Fortunately I have no such concerns with Complion, as it was immediately evident upon reviewing this listing that your company shares similar views in the value of user-centered design.

As you review my application, you may use the credentials below to view the confidential projects on my portfolio website. These projects contain designs for features that are still in development and have not yet been publicly announced by my former company, so I ask that you please use discretion when sharing.
